The Communication Challenge

Many organizations struggle to effectively collect and share knowledge. Communication is often limited to traditional methods such as telephone, voicemail, email, IM, text messages and meeting rooms. Supporting electronic documents may reside in email attachments, disparate repositories or worse... personal systems. These knowledge assets effectively become stuck in rigid and restrictive information silos. This environment of disconnected knowledge severely limits productivity and provides a greater opportunity for security lapses and privacy breaches.

Often, we not only need bring together internal teams, but other constituents such as customers, partners, suppliers and agencies. These communities are frequently geographically dispersed spanning disparate time zones, cultures, systems, and processes making timely coordination and communication difficult to achieve, and seamless collaboration with all parties impractical.
